However, short-listing may be done duly deciding higher cut-offs to restrict the number of candidates at each level. 24. The Institute may decide to conduct a screening test to assess the general ability of the candidates including the computer typing skills. This test result may be used for qualifying the people for interview duly short-listing the candidates, if the numbers of people to be interviewed are proportionately large. However, if the numbers of people shortlisted at level-1 are less than the ratio of 1:5, the selection Committee may decide to conduct the interview directly without any separate screening test. Therefore, the screening test is not mandatory which may be conducted at the discretion of the competent authority, only to optimize the number of people to be called for interview through which the selections are made.
25. The screening tests is of general nature and are only for the purpose of short-listing the candidates for interview and optional at the discretion of the competent authority. The screening tests are purely of qualifying nature without any composite weightage, purely in order to reduce the number of candidates to be invited for the interview based on which selections are made. However, wherever specific trade test is conducted to test the professional acumen of the candidate relevant to the job, the suitable weightage between the trade test and the interview shall be given.
